1 TOURIST OFFICE

The Tourist office is at the main bus stop and was the train station from 1925 to 1950. The trains used to carry both passengers and merchandise from Bourgneuf-en-Retz to Les Sables d'Olonne, including building materials for the construction of the Atlantic Wall during World War II.

2 THE CHURCH

The first written records of the church date back to 1105 by the monks at Noirmoutier's Abbey. Given the name 'Beatam Maria de Montibus' in 1343, over time the church's name became used for the town. In 1741, a huge sandstorm struck and the church tower collapsed, devastating the building. The removal of all the sand from the church created the small hill where the Place de l'Europe is today. Following another storm in 1972, the weathercock at the top of the tower was in danger of falling down. Whilst it was being replaced, it was found that it had been pierced by two bullets. These were as a result of the German soldiers who, during World War II, for their target practice, used to shoot at the weathercock! Today you can see it displayed at the Jardin du Vent.

6 LA CLAIRIÈRE

This is a lovely amphitheatre in the heart of the forest for atmospheric concerts, plays or recitals in the summer. It is also a great place for a picnic.

7 THE PONT D'YEU

At low tide, when there is a high tidal coefficient (at least 100) you can find a long strip of pebbles and rocks stretching out to sea for about 4 km. This is formed by two opposing currents coming together.

The Pont d'Yeu got his name from the legend about a deal made between the bishop, St Martin, who wanted to spread the word of the gospel, and the devil. In one night, before the cockerel crowed, the devil had to build a bridge joining île d'Yeu to the mainland. To gain more time, Satan got the cockerel drunk. But this trick in fact had the opposite effect, and instead the cockerel awoke in the middle of night. Caught out by his own trick, the devil didn't honour the deal and so the bridge was left unfinished.

Today, it is a great place for clam fishing where, if you look carefully, you can spot the wreck of the Martha, a Norwegian boat which sank in 1905.

8 KULMINO

Enjoy a breath-taking view from the viewing platform, 70 metres above the ground. Much more than just a spectacular view, it is also a way to see the differing landscape over the whole territory. This fully functioning water tower also offers an interactive exhibition on the theme of water. Estimated length of visit: between 30 mins and 1 hour - Entrance with an admission fee
